NAPOLEON AND HIS MARSHALS By A. G. MACDONELL, author of 'England their England' 7s. 6d.

'One of the most satisfying pageants of human nature I have ever read . . . this intensely moving, quite absorbing book.' - Compton Mackenzie (Daily Mail).

EGYPT SINCE CROMER By LORD LLOYD OF DOLOBRAN, G.C.S.I. Vol. II, with Maps 21s.

THE JEWS IN THE MODERN WORLD By Dr. ARTHUR RUPPIN With Preface by Professor L. B. NAMIER 15s.

'There is no book in English, and no book of like compass in any language, which can compare with it for accuracy, solid information, ordered presentation, and quiet lucidity. In its chosen field and for its particular purpose it is, and will long remain, authoritative.' - Manchester Guardian.

CIVITAS DEI A Search for a Guiding Principle in Public Affairs By LIONEL CURTIS 10s. 6d.

THE CHINESE: Their History and Culture By KENNETH LATOURETTE, M.A. 2 vols. 30s.

'Prof. Latourette brings his story down to the latest days of the Kuomintang, and dwells constantly on the immense and world-affecting changes from the old China of traditional, ripe culture to the new China.' - Morning Post.

MODERNISMUS By SIR REGINALD BLOMFIELD, R.A. Illustrated 6s.

'A stimulating, amusing book, as readable and provocative as those of Mr. Sitwell, Mr. Herbert Read, Mr. R. H. Wilenski and the other defenders of Baroque and Modernism on whom he lavishes his satire and learning.' - Daily Telegraph.

PADEREWSKI By CHARLES PHILLIPS Illus. With an Introduction by Colonel E. M. HOUSE 16s.

Colonel House says: 'In wealth of detail and in scholarly arrangement of the facts, no life of Paderewski that has come to my notice equals this one.'

AN ANTHOLOGY OF WIT Selected by GUY BOAS A companion volume to A Punch Anthology 6s.

ITALIAN STUDIES By EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A., formerly Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford. Edited by CECILIA M. ADY 12s. 6d.

THE STIMULUS OF CRITICISM

OVER and over again I have been asked, 'How can I learn to write for the Press?' And my invariable answer is, 'Through Criticism.'

Writing is not an art which may be mastered by reading text-books. There are several excellent books published which discuss the subject, but when the beginner has read and re-read them, all he has gained is a knowledge of theory.

What he needs most is practice and criticism.

It is because the London School of Journalism gives its students practice in writing and criticizes their work constructively that such a large measure of success attends it.

An apt comment is supplied by a letter received by Sir Max Pemberton from a very well-known literary man who is now Editor of an important weekly journal. In the course of his letter he remarks:

'The result of the work (of the School) makes all us experienced journalists regret that we did not have the chance to attend such an institution in our youth. I still possess a drawer-full of ancient MSS. which, twenty-five years ago, travelled from office to office only to be returned. None of these could ever have been written if Max Pemberton's School had existed in those days.'

Journalism and story-writing can, in short, be taught in no other way than by setting the student to write and criticizing his work. And that criticism must, of course, be individual. Any attempt at stereotyped criticism or awarding 'marks' is pre-doomed to failure. Each student must be handled individually if his natural talents are to be developed and made fruitful. He must, in effect, receive personal coaching, and that is what every student of The London School of Journalism does actually receive.

Hence the solid success which has been won by L.S.J. students in all parts of the world—success which represents contributions to practically every newspaper and journal printed in the English language.

Many of the 'star' contributors to the London newspapers and magazines are L.S.J. students.

Their subjects, viewpoints and styles differ in every case, showing that they have been trained to express themselves as individuals and not 'taught' on a cut-and-dried plan.

Some of those to whom I refer had previously written, but with little or no success. They required the critical eye of a practised journalist or author to show them wherein their work fell short of publication standard, and they needed, also, some guidance in choice of subject, in handling of plot, in construction of article or story, and also in the right market to which to send their work.

In all these important matters the beginner is fairly sure to go astray, no matter what his command of words may be or what novelty of plot or theme he may contrive. The root matter of rejected MSS. is often very good: it is in the handling of it that the writer has gone wrong. Instruction and criticism by a practical journalist would save him from this and enable him to reap the fruits of his brainwork.

Rejections are a constant mystery to many would-be writers; for editors are too busy to explain to the disappointed contributor why his MS. has been rejected.

I cannot do better than suggest, once again, that any present reader who wishes to know why he has not achieved publication, or any would-be writer who wishes to know what his chances of success may be, should send a short MS. by way of example to The London School of Journalism. Upon it Sir Max Pemberton, the Director of the School, will base an opinion and will advise the sender accordingly.

As no fee is charged for this service and no obligation is entailed, none who wishes for expert criticism and advice should hesitate to act upon my suggestion.

I know that it has resulted very satisfactorily for some hundreds of men and women who are now contributing regularly to the Press and thereby earning a substantial addition to their regular incomes.
